

This week's astounding discovery is: Whose Poo ?

The different kinds of animals and birds found on the farm eat all sorts of different foods. Their tummies work in different ways to digest their food, so it's not surprising that their droppings look very different.

Here's some photographs of different kinds of poo that you may find on the farm. Look around, discover which animals produced them, and write down the answers on this sheet.

Green and runny, after eating too much pond slime.

Whose poo do you think this is?

.....

Neat little dry torpedoes.

Whose poo do you think this is?

.....

Big lumps full of straw and grass fibres.

Whose poo do you think this is?

.....

A knobby sausage.

Whose poo do you think this is?

.....

Little round balls, squashed into a sausage

Whose poo do you think this is?

.....

Brown and white (a mixture of poo and pee)

Whose poo do you think this is?

.....

Neat little brown and green balls.

Whose poo do you think this is?

.....

A big runny pancake.

Whose poo do you think this is?

.....

CLUE: The droppings pictured on this page are from a chicken, a cow, a duck, a guinea pig, a pig, a pony, a rabbit, and a sheep. You've got to find out which is which.

Dinner Time

A pony, a goat and a goose arrive at your house for a romantic dinner party.

What do you think you should feed them ?

Draw their favourite food on each plate.

CLUE: All three creatures like grass and cereals

As special treats, a pony might have apples and carrots, a goat might have some branches and leaves, whilst a goose would love some smelly pondweed.